Staffing Announcement

Retirement Announcement for Theresa O'Donnell

After 15 years of service with the City of Dallas, Theresa O'Donnell has announced her retirement effective February 12, 2019.

Theresa began her career in 2003 as the Director of Planning and Development, which included the supervision of various functions to include long range planning, zoning and subdivision, historic preservation, and urban design. While in this role, Theresa oversaw the development of several significant planning efforts, including:

- 2006 Forward Dallas
- 2011 Bike Plan Update
- 2011 Downtown 360 Plan

During the last three years, Theresa worked directly for the City Manager's Office overseeing the development of two outward facing, multi-department plans: Neighborhood Plus and Resilient Dallas Strategy. A crucial element of Resilient Dallas was the development of the Equity Indicators - a candid assessment of Dallas' historically under-resourced communities of color and the disparate impact that lack of funding and attention has had on the people living in those neighborhoods. She has also staffed the Mayor's Taskforce on Poverty and assisted the City Manager's Office on the Goals for Dallas 2030 plan.

While we are sad to see Theresa leave, we congratulate her on retirement and wish her the best on her future endeavors.

A defendant may bring three (3) canned goods to Court for credit that will eliminate the $50 warrant fee per case. This will apply only to cases where there is no plea yet entered. Media Requests
January 29 – February 4

January 31, 2019; Miguelangel Pinero Alvarez, Multimedia Journalist, Univision:

I am working on this new case. This is at Gus Thomasson Rd (From Kilkenney to Ferguson) According to residents and business owners, the restoration in this avenue started about two years. They have not received any respond on when the project supposed to finish. They are complaining because of the traffic, contaminated water and damages in the area. I would like to know what the City's plan is. When the project is expected to be finished? I was there yesterday, and some residents told me that it should have ended already. Is that true?

City Response:

The Gus Thomasson/Ferguson project is a total reconstruction project that includes all new underground utilities (water, sewer, storm water, and gas). Atmos Energy just finished the last of their work about a week ago, and we are lining up the contractor to begin the final paving in about three weeks. To provide a smoother temporary driving surface, we completed pavement level-ups this week and we plan to lay temporary asphalt as soon as the weather permits.

As the project scope includes lighting and landscaping, we anticipate that the project will be completed this summer but completing the road work will be the first priority.

Can you help us with an answer to these questions?

City Response: The answer is yes. Here is the link to the required qualifications for boards and commissions.

January 31, 2019; Melissa Repko, Reporter, Dallas Morning News: I'd appreciate if you or Don could send me links/copies of the two lawsuits that Dallas is participating in relating to small cell deployment. I've attached an open records request and would appreciate your help fulfilling it.

City Response: The City of Dallas has designated the City Secretary as the officer for public information. Accordingly, please submit all open records requests made through e-mail to openrecords@dallascityhall.com and please submit all open records requests made through fax to the attention of the City Secretary at 214-670-5029. City Response:

1. Why is the city challenging the state law and FCC order about small cell deployment? Why do you see it as a critical matter for Dallas?

The state law is unconstitutional because it provides a gift of the use of public property at a fraction of its market value. It is no different than if the Legislature had passed a bill to require cities to make office space in publicly-owned buildings available to wireless companies for a fraction of the going rental rate. The FCC order can be summed up by saying the FCC took something that does not belong to them and tried to give it away for a fraction of its true value. This is a play out of a very old play book. Communications companies have been trying to argue that the federal government can give them use of state and local right-of-way as far back as the 1800's, when the U. S. Supreme Court ruled in 1893 in the case of St. Louis v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 148 U. S. 92, 13 Sup. Ct. 485, 37 L. Ed. 380 (1893), that the federal government had no more authority to take public land from local government for use by the telegraph company than it had a right to take land from private individuals.

2. Why have cable and landlines been treated differently than broadband deployment? How do you believe broadband should be treated under the law?

Broadband providers convinced the FCC in the 1990's that they were just providing an information service, and not a telecommunications service, and that therefore they were not physically using the right of way. Of course, no one can use a DSL, cable-modem, or fiber broadband service without using lines that run through the right of way. This is even more apparent today as most people have canceled their land lines (that included right-of-way fees) but still have broadband service that uses the same lines but pays no right-of-way fees. The same thing is happening as customers “cut-the-cord” by cancelling their cable service while now streaming the same content over the same cable lines that delivered their cable service, but now no right-of-way fee is paid for cable lines in the right of way.

Broadband should be treated like every other user of the right-of-way by paying a fair rental for use of public property. Broadband is a transport service, it delivers content chosen by its customers through “pipes” in the right of way. We need a right-of-way fee structure that charges for transport services that use the right-of-way regardless of what that service is called.

3. You said that with the new right-of-way fees, taxpayers will be subsidizing telecom companies. Can you put into context how much money the city of Dallas will lose? How much can it charge now vs. what it would have charged in the past?

Dallas’ fee for a network node (small cell) is $2000 annually if on a non-City owned pole. There is a charge to use a City pole of $1000 annually. This is in line with what other cities have charged for use of the right-of-way and city owned structures. The state statute SB 1004 (Chapter 284 of the Local Government Code) limits what the City can charge to $250 per node and $20 per city-owned pole. Based on industry estimates of how many network nodes we will have by the time 5G is built out (10,000) that is a loss of $27,300,000 a year ($17,500,00 for nodes plus $9,800,000 for poles) if 25% of the nodes are on City-owned poles. That is over $27 million that will not be available to provide city services, maintain roadways or pay first responders. And yet Texans will pay the same amount for their wireless services that customers in other states pay. The legislature gave the wireless companies a gift worth billions and got absolutely nothing for Texans in return. Pretending they wouldn’t have built out their networks without this give-away is pure fantasy. They build the networks their customers demand, or they lose their customers.

In addition to the $27 million in direct revenue loses, the state legislation also puts at jeopardy the approximately $40 million in annual revenue the City currently is paid for right-of-way use by wireline telecom companies and cable/video providers. Because those services can all be provided using 5G technology that occupies the right-of-way but only pays $250 per node per year for the privilege, much of that $40 million of revenue could vanish as those services are replaced by 5G fixed wireless services that are only wireless between the antenna in your alley and the box on the side of your house that connects to your home network

4. Telecom providers have said the standardized rules and fees about deployment will free up time and money so they can expand service in underserved areas, such as rural towns or low-income neighborhoods in the inner city. It sounds like you don’t buy that argument. Why not?

I listen to what the industry executives who make those decisions say. When Matt Ellis - Verizon Communications Inc. - EVP and CFO was asked by an analyst during an OCTOBER 23, 2018 earnings call if the FCC Order would accelerate deployment his answer was “I don’t see it having a material impact to our buildout plans. We are going as fast as we can.” And I think that is true for all the providers. They have no intention of every serving areas they view as less profitable because they are in business to make money and as much of it as they can. Unless someone requires them to serve these areas, they have no reason to do so. What the FCC has done is take billions of dollars from local governments and given it to wireless providers with no accountability for what they do with it. If the FCC really cared about serving underserved areas, they have the authority to say “spend that money on underserved areas” but they did not.

City of Dallas

5. What tools can the city of Dallas use to try to get broadband infrastructure, from fiber to small cells, deployed equitably across neighborhoods -- particularly in low-income or underserved areas?

Because of state and federal intrusion into local authority, our choices are limited. We are left with two options. First, appeal to the providers sense of community and ask for their help in getting service to underserved areas. Second, leverage the City's own need for service throughout the City to force a buildout to all parts of the City. Of course, use of one does not preclude use of the other.

6. On our phone call, you said this quote. Could I use it? I'd appreciate if you could elaborate on what you mean by this, too: "We are down to begging at this point because the state and federal government have left us with nothing else."

Yes, you can use the quote. I was referring to the state and federal intrusion into local authority. The deployment of prior technologies, wireline telephone, and cable television, for example where done under local regulation and in both cases, cities required that providers serve the entire community, not just cherry pick a portion of the city and leave everyone else without. That practice is the only reason many people have access to high speed cable modem service – because when the cities required buildout of the cable system that meant everyone also had access to cable modem service. Had our City not been handcuffed by state and federal law, every resident could now have access to multiple high-speed broadband services. But cities were not allowed to dictate deployment of these later technologies, so instead we have the digital divide.

7. Why do you believe the rollout of 5G will widen the digital divide? What have you seen or heard that indicates that -- particularly in Dallas?

The rollout of 5G will only widen the digital divide because right now every Dallas resident has access to high speed broadband in the form of cable-modem service. But 5G services will only be available where 5G antennas and equipment have been deployed. No provider has suggested they will place these facilities in every part of the City. All the amazing services we hear about that will be enabled by 5G technology will only be available to those who live and work near the 5G facilities.

8. You spoke about how policymakers and people have to decide if this is a societal issue. Can you talk about what you mean by that?

The digital divide will never be erased by the marketplace. In fact, it was created by the marketplace and market forces. Providers chase the customers with the most money and ignore the rest because that is how you make the most money. That has real consequences for our communities. While state and local policy makers give lip service to fixing the digital divide, they have removed from local leaders the very tools that could be used to erase it forever. Let local leaders require deployment throughout our communities and the digital divide will no longer exist in our cities.

Dallas Fire-Rescue Department
Media Requests: January 28th – February 3rd, 2019.

Thursday, January 31st: NBC 5 (Mike Conner) - About 10pm, Wed night, a DFR ambulance was involved in an accident at Bonnie View Rd & Southerland Ave; What can you tell me about this? Any injuries? Was it carrying a patient or responding to a call?

City Response – (From DPD): On January 30, 2019, at approximately 9:49 p.m. Dallas Fire Rescue ambulance 72 was travelling southbound 1800 Bonnie View Road. Suspect David Sosa was travelling westbound 2200 Southerland Ave when he ran the stop sign at Bonnie View Road. The suspect collided his vehicle front distributed into the left passenger side of the Dallas Fire Rescue ambulance forcing it off the road and into a metal fence. The suspect was transported to Methodist Central in stable condition. There were no injuries reported to the Dallas Fire Rescue paramedics. The suspect was found to be under the influence of alcohol and was placed under arrest for DWI.

Thursday, January 31st: All local media outlets – May we have more information about an 18-wheeler on fire on Highway 183 near Regal Row?

City Response - At 13:02 Dallas Fire-Rescue units were dispatched to Highway 183 near Regal Row Drive for an accident involving an 18-wheeler which reportedly overturned and caught on fire. According to our first responders, Irving FD were the ones who put the fire out. Unbelievably, the driver of the 18-wheeler was able to escape, and Irving FD transported him to the hospital as well.

I'm told that Irving PD and DSO were on scene, so I don't really know who's investigating; but if you're in need of detail associated with the fire suppression operation and transport, you'll need to contact Irving FD.

Saturday, February 2nd: All local news desks – May we have more information about an explosion DFR is responding to around Downtown Dallas?

City Response - At 19:52 Dallas Fire-Rescue responded to a 911 for a fire, near 315 South Cesar Chavez Boulevard, after a reported explosion sent black smoke into the immediate area in Downtown Dallas.

According to on-scene personnel, an unknown malfunction in an underground electrical vault caused an explosion and sent a column of black smoke into the air.

DFR and Oncor personnel are standing by until the smoke clears and the situation can be addressed in a safe manner. In the meantime, Fire personnel have checked nearby buildings for smoke; and one property owner had to be contacted as the impact of the explosion blew out some of his windows.

Thankfully, there were no injuries reported. Oncor personnel will be looking into exactly what happened.

Sunday, February 3rd: All local media outlets – Can you provide more information about a Carbon Monoxide Emergency in which a reported four people were killed?

City Response - At 9:26 a.m. Dallas Fire-Rescue responded to a 911 call for a Carbon Monoxide (CO) Emergency after the owner of a South Dallas home under construction, located at 1446 Owega Avenue, found four people (2 adults males and 2 boys less than 2 years of age) dead inside the home.

City of Dallas

According to the home owner, two men who were working on the house, and the two children of one of the workers, slept there overnight. They were using a generator, which was originally placed outdoors, to serve various indoor power needs. Reportedly, someone may have attempted to steal the generator; so as a measure to keep it safe, the men brought it inside with them. It is unclear how long the generator was inside the house, but with no ventilation, it ran long enough to build up to fatal levels.

Firefighters were able to confirm the deaths in addition to the presence of CO as well as its source. The victims were found in a rear bedroom, while the gas-powered generator was found in a separate room.

It's not known whether the victims fully understood the dangers of CO exposure, but DFR feels it important to use such tragedies as a teaching opportunity. Known as the Invisible Killer, CO has no color or odor and is virtually undetectable without the use of a hand-held or in-home CO detector/alarm. While gas-powered generators are a common source of CO, other sources include gas and charcoal grills. More safety information for CO, and many other fire-related topics, can be found on our website, at <http://dallasfirerescue.com/educators.html>.

Tuesday, February 5th: CBS 11 News (Giles Hudson) - Saw this today and was asked to check with local hospitals and fire departments to see if you folks use this brand.

Thanks.

City Response - Dallas Fire-Rescue (DFR) was recently made aware of a recall notice, issued by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), in regards to the defibrillators we use.

According to the notice, certain Stryker LIFEPAK 15 Monitor/Defibrillators can experience a lock-up condition after a defibrillation shock is delivered; rendering the unit unresponsive despite visual indicators of it having power. According to the manufacturer, over 13,000 of the units could be potentially impacted.

DFR utilizes a total of 53 LIFEPAK 15's, with 17 of those meeting the recall criteria. As it currently stands, none of those units have experienced the reported issue; however, the Department is already in the process of working with the manufacturer to apply the appropriate corrective measures in a timely fashion. In the meantime, DFR will continue providing service with excellence to the citizens of Dallas until the matter is fully resolved.
