Dallas Public Library will host Chinese Health Information Outreach project

What: The Dallas Public Library and the University of North Texas Information Sciences School will present a program for Chinese language speakers on how to access and use health information on the internet. This training session will provide participants with an internet pathfinder and demonstrate available online health resources.

When: 2 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 2

Where: Hamon Room, 5th floor, Dallas Central Library, 1515 Young St,

Why: The Chinese population is one of the fastest growing groups in Dallas/Fort Worth. Presently, there are no formal mechanisms that specifically address their health information needs. The purpose of the program is to improve the Chinese community's ability to access and use quality health information on the Internet.

Seating is limited. To make a reservation, call (214) 670-1608. For more information, contact Della Pan at dpan@lis.admin.unt.edu or Dr. Ana Cleveland at ana@lis.admin.unt.edu.
